MILLICENT RAMOS SLIGHTLY BETTER

Condition of Rogers Heiress, Ill With Pneumonia at Southampton, Reported Improved

MOTHER IS SPEEDING HERE

The condition of Mrs. Arturo Peralta Ramos, the daughter of Colonel and Mrs. Henry H. Rogers, was reported slightly improved today. Mrs. Ramos, the former Millicent Rogers, is ill with double pneumonia at the residence of her parents in Southampton, L. I. She has been ill since Thursday.

News of the heiress's illness did not become known until yesterday, when advices from Paris revealed that Mrs. Ramos's mother was booking passage aboard the Leviathan for New York today to be with her daughter.

With Mrs. Ramos, who, before her marriage to Mr. Ramos, was the divorced wife of Count Ludwig Salm von Hoogstraeten, is her husband and her father. Mr. Ramos, an Argentinian, is a member of the firm of J. F. Benkert & Co., stockbrokers, with offices at 55 Broadway.

Friends of the Rogers family were reported today as expressing surprise at the news that Mrs. Rogers was hastening back to the United States, since physicians said that Mrs. Ramos was suffering from a severe cold. Yesterday, however, a diagnosis revealed that the heiress was a victim of double pneumonia.

SPENT TOO LITTLE, LOST, SAYS STOKES

Former Jersey Governor Declares Primary Expenses Were $14,000

FOES ADMITTED $50,000

Washington, June 5 (AP).—Edward C. Stokes, former Governor of New Jersey and runner up in the recent Republican Senatorial primary in that State, told the Reed Campaign Funds Committee today his campaign cost $14,609.44, of which he contributed $5,300.

The committee developed yesterday that Hamilton F. Kean, winner of the primary contest, and Joseph F. Frelinghuysen, a third candidate in the five-cornered New Jersey race, had each put up $50,000 to help their drives and that expenditures had been almost to the limit of that sum.

Mr. Stokes said about $6,000 of his campaign expenditures went for advertising. His fund totaled $16,355, but with all bills paid, he said, he put what was left in his pocket.

Senator McNary, Republican, of Oregon, questioned Stokes, whose charges during the primary brought on the Senate inquiry. He asked particularly about the contest in Atlantic County, where Enoch Johnson, County Treasurer, supported Kean.

Johnson is usually a supporter of Senator Edge, Republican, of New Jersey, who was backing Stokes, but Stokes said Johnson "certainly did not support me." He said he did not know what led Johnson to back Kean.

"Do you know of any fraud in the primary?" asked McNary.

"Charges were made on account of excessive votes in places," he answered. "When almost unanimous votes were cast for one man in some places, the presumption is 'it was overdone.'"

"Where did that happen?"

Stokes said he didn't know off-hand, but that he believed a study of the records would show it.

"I can't relay rumors to you when I am under oath; I want to deal in facts," he added.

McNary asked him to submit leads to the committee which might help the investigation. Stokes offered none.

Senator King, Democrat, of Utah, asked Stokes to submit his views on legislation to restrict campaign expenditures.

"I'll be glad to," he replied. "I lost this campaign because I did not spend money. There is no doubt of that. But I wanted to try the experiment."

Stokes recalled Kean was a candidate four years ago against Senator Edge, "and he has been a candidate ever since."

"Did he pay men during those four years?" King asked.

"I can't prove it, but I wouldn't think men would do for me what they did for him without pay."

The witness also blamed his failure to get a single vote in some precincts to "domination of the machine." He said the organization used all kinds of persuasive influences "to whip voters into line." "A poor man" cannot run for office he declared, pounding the table.

Senator McNary then closed the investigation. It is unlikely hearings will be resumed until after the conventions.

POLICEMAN FOUND SLAIN

Westchester Police Investigate Apparent Murder of Special Officer

The Westchester County police today are investigating the death of James Deviney of East Irvington, N. Y., employed by the Westchester County Park Commission as a special policeman, who was found dead yesterday, apparently a murder victim, in the woods near that town. Mrs. John D. Donaldson, daughter of Senator T. Coleman du Pont of Delaware, found the body while taking a ride. Mrs. Donaldson called Chief Bernard F. McCall of the Irvington police.

The police discovered that Deviney had a long gash in the back of his head. His coat had been neatly folded and put under his head and covered with grass pulled from around the spot. Five marks made by an automobile were found near the body.

GOAT GETS GOAT OF BRONX POLICE

His Antics Despair of Bluecoat Force—They Can't Keep Him and They Can't Lose Him

The wild goat of the Bronx pampas, a thin and vindictive animal who answers bitterly to the name of Henry Clay III, made life more miserable for Bronx policemen today than life usually is even for Bronx policemen. Henry was first lassoed at 149th Street when he approached several young ladies.

Taken into the Morrisania police station and tied, a created a clamor without making a noise, and Lieutenant Hickey ordered him removed as objectionable. Henry broke loose, lowered his horns and charged into a covey of school children. Six policemen once more gave chase and captured him. When Henry broke away a third time, Lieutenant Hickey decided to quarantine the police station basement and put the goat there. He did. If you want a plague you can have Henry.

COLUMBIA EXPANDS ZOOLOGY DIVISION

Dr. Leslie Dunn and James Gray to Carry on Works of Dr. Morgan

PROF. WILSON WILL RETIRE

Plans to develop the department of zoology, including the appointment of Dr. Leslie Clarence Dunn of the Agricultural Department Station at Storrs, Conn., and James Gray of the University of Cambridge, England, to carry on the experimental work of Professor Thomas H. Morgan, famous for his studies in genetics, have been approved by the trustees of Columbia University.

This program of expansion, continuing a general advance in teaching and investigation in the science departments of the university, embraces broadening of research, creation of a new professorship and a new lectureship, reorganization of courses, enlargement of equipment and, ultimately, the construction of laboratories for the biological sciences rivaling those recently provided for physics and chemistry.

Edmund B. Wilson, Da Costa professor of zoology and executive officer of the department, who has been at Columbia for thirty-seven years, will retire from active service as lecturer and teacher on July 1 with the rank of professor emeritus in residence. With Professor Henry Fairfield Osborn of the American Museum of Natural History he organized the department of zoology at Columbia in 1891.

To Continue Research

Professor Wilson will continue to conduct research at the university, and will be available for consultation and advice by advanced students. He will not, however, offer any stated instruction leading to a degree. Professor Wilson, known for research in cytology, embryology and zoology, was instrumental in calling Professor Morgan to Columbia from Bryn Mawr to organize the work in experimental zoology. Professor Morgan will leave Columbia in July for the California Institute of Technology at Pasadena, Cal., where he will be the head of the department of biology.

Dr. Wilson began his career as a lecturer in biology at Williams College during 1883-1884. During the next year he was lecturer in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. From 1885 to 1891 he was professor of biology in Bryn Mawr College, where he instituted the biology department. He was appointed adjunct professor of biology in Columbia in 1891, and Da Costa professor in 1911.

Dr. Dunn will occupy the new professorship of zoology. He was born in Buffalo, N. Y., in 1893, and was graduated from Dartmouth College in 1915. He pursued advanced studies at Harvard University, taking the degree of doctor of science in 1920.

Served in War

For four years he was assistant in zoology at Harvard. He served as first lieutenant of infantry in the Expeditionary Forces during the World War. He is a fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science and a member of various scientific societies. Dr. Dunn is regarded as one of the leaders among the younger men in the field of biology in America.

Mr. Gray, now lecturer in Kings College, Cambridge, will be the new lecturer in zoology. He is called an outstanding figure in the younger British group in zoology. He is thirty-eight years of age and was trained at Cambridge, where he received the degree of A.B. in 1912 and A.M. in 1916.

The most widely known achievements in the department of zoology of Columbia during the last twenty-five years have been the studies of the phenomena of heredity and their physical basis. In this field, the laboratory of Columbia, it is asserted, has led the world. These studies involved analysis of Mendel's laws of heredity and their physical basis in their operation of germ cells.

POLICE TAKE CLERK IN HOLDUP MURDER

To Be Questioned on Slaying of Race Track Bookmaker on May 30

Detectives Horan and Owens of the Broadway Squad today took into custody Louis Foster, a clerk living at the Hotel Manger, for questioning in connection with the murder of Max Saloman, 374 Fort Washington Avenue, May 30.

Saloman was shot to death in front of 260 West Thirty-first Street when he resisted an attempted hold-up by four bandits. According to the police, he was a racetrack bookmaker, and was accustomed to bring large sums of money from the Belmont track each day. When the bandits killed him, he was waiting on a corner for his brother-in-law, who because of the holiday, had taken their receipts to the post office for safe keeping.

Servant Problem on L. I. Set All Awry by Lindbergh; Colonel in 35th Floor Office

New Maids Spring Up From Nowhere to Help Serve Each Luncheon Course, and Hostesses Are Bewildered, but It's All a Matter of Curiosity

They are finding in Long Island that the process of entertaining Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh has developed a new complication.

Colonel Lindbergh makes frequent visits to the Fort Washington home of Harry Guggenheim of the Guggenheim Foundation. He also stays with Assistant Secretary of War F. Trubee Davison. From these stately residences he often makes excursions for luncheon or dinner at other North Shore homes.

There the hostess plans every course and is especially anxious to have everything go off well. Yet it is almost a regular happening to have her sense suddenly that something is going wrong with the usually well ordered machinery of serving the meal. Things are not done quite as she is used to having them done. Nothing is actually wrong, but she suddenly has a stage-manager's sense that everything is not exactly right.

New Maids on Duty

She looks up and suddenly sees that the maid who is serving the fish is strange to her. A sharp glance shows that two other strangers are waiting on the table. But one of her own maids is in the room.

The next course is worse. Three more new and unknown faces take the place of the three strangers. And at the dessert there are three new faces still.

The meal goes along to its conclusion, with the hostess on tenterhooks of anxiety and puzzlements.

All for Curiosity

Then the butler solves the mystery: "Beg your pardon, madam, but the maids in the neighborhood wished to have a chance to see Colonel Lindbergh, so our maids asked a few of them in to help wait at luncheon."

The pactice is said to be well established though that "grapevine" telegraph that runs through the servants' dining halls in the big Long Island houses. Colonel Lindbergh, it is said, is blissfully ignorant of its existence. It does not annoy him, as does the souvenir-hunting process of cutting up his shirts in the laundry.

AIRPORT CATCHES CHAMBERLIN'S EYE

City's Aeronautical Engineer Approves Barren Island Site for Municipal Field

URGES SPEEDY COMPLETION

Clarence D. Chamberlin, famous transatlantic flyer and now the city's aeronautical engineer, today approved the site of the first municipal airport which is being developed on Barren Island in Jamaica Bay, and which has been criticized as inaccessible by commercial aviation companies.

Chamberlin inspected the site this moring. It was his first act as the citys air engineer, and incidentally it marked the first anniversary of his flight to Germany.

"The Barren Island site is all right," said Chamberlin. "It is the one which can be most quickly gotten into shape for use and what the city needs is a municipal airport as soon as possible. "Other fields will come along quickly, I think. I expect that before long Governors Island will be converted into an air field by the Army and that the Army will allow its use for planes other than those owned by the Government."

Chamberlin said that in the next few days he would make a close study of the city's plans for the development f the Barren Island field. If the weather is fair tomorrow, he will make another inspection with Commissioner of Docks Cosgrove. At the present time only dredging and filling are being done there.

The field will be thoroughly up to date in its equipment, Chamberlin said. His work, he said, will be particularly to advise on the location of the various runways and hangars.

Chamberlin's appointment was announced yesterday by Commissioner Cosgrove. He will be paid $1,000 a month an dhis appointment is of indefinite duration. Chamberlin has just completed a tour of the air fields of the country and is finishing up his job as expert adviser on the construction of the Albany field.

MORTGAGE LOANS PLACED

Momand & Co. placed for Bedford Home Builders, Inc., a building and permanent loan of $245,000 on six-story elevator apartment building on Homecrest Avenue, 260 feet south of Avenue U, Brooklyn, and for Morton I. Holzer a permanent loan of $175,000 on two-story elevator garage on Kew Gardens Road, Kew Gardens.

Dowdney, Richart & Haigh arranged with the Title Guarantee and Trust Company a mortgage of $200,000 for five years on 31-33 West Eleventh Street, an eight-story apartment house.

James Boyd procured a loan of $185,000 on six-story elevator apartment house at 838 Riverside Drive; also a $208,000 building and permanent loan on six-story elevator apartment house to be erected at northwest corner of Ridge Boulevard and Ninety-third Street, Brooklyn.

Here Come Half Dozen More Transatlantic Flyers, and Lindbergh Tears Up the Phone Book—His New Office High Over Harbor and Broadway

The elevator door opened at the thirty-fifth floor of the new Harriman Building, 39 Broadway. Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh, freshly shaved, in a business suit that fitted his lean figure, stepped out.

He walked with long strides to his office. The office overlooked lower Broadway, Bowling Green, the fog-vapored harbor.

"Good morning," Colonel Lindbergh said to his secretary. "What's the schedule for today?"

"Well," she said, "the Mayor's committee is giving a reception at the Battery to half a dozen more transatlantic flyers. I forget their names. Why——"

"There they are now!" she cried. "They're coming up Broadway for the ovation from the skyscrapers."

Knows the Routine

Colonel Lindbergh knew where his duty lay. He reached for a telephone book. With the deftness of a veteran skyscraper toiler he tore the book into shreds. He opened his window.

The torn telephone book fluttered from his hands, joining the tons of impromptu confetti that showered on the heads of the new heroes, who rode triumphantly on the back seat of a motor car, as street crowds cheered.

The whooping down below floated eerily up to Colonel Lindbergh's window. He listened for a moment, a cryptic smile on his lips. Then he leaned out the window. "Hooray!" he yelled. "Hooray!"

That, at least, was the way an imaginative rental agent today pictured the imaginary scene. For in a few days Colonel Lindbergh is going to have a vantage point for welcoming the city's heroes who take that paper-strewn path of glory that leads up Broadway to the City Hall.

Workmen today were preparing the flyer's offices in the Harriman Building tower. They will be his headquarters when he goes about his duties as chairman of the technical committee of the recently organized Transcontinental Air Transport, Inc.

His office, a reporter found, commands a sweeping view of the city, the lower harbor and out to sea. It's a regular airman's nest.

NEW GRAVE COVERS PIONEER MINISTER

Body of Pastor Who Died in 1823 Lay Years Under Bowling Alley

WAS HESSIAN MERCENARY

The body of one of America's religious pioneers, which has lain incongruously for the past few years beneath the rumbling floor of a bowling alley, today rested in a new and quiet grave.

The Rev. Christian Bork, D.D., died September 29, 1823, at the age of sixty-nine. Funeral services were conducted yesterday afternoon by the Rev. Dr. Witherspoon Wyle, pastor of the Central Presbyterian Church, at Cypress Hills Cemetery, where the body was reinterred.

The curious burial spot was known to only a few of the trustees of Central Presbyterian, which, until recently, occupied the site at Madison Avenue and Fifty-seventh Street. And they kept secret the fact that the body lay beneath the shining floor because they feared such publicity might pare down the popularity of the bowling alley, conducted for the young people of the parish.

The coffin, then, might have rested there secretly and indefinitely if the old church building had not been sold to a commercial concern, which now plans to erect a thirty-story bank building at the Madison Avenue site. Central Presbyterian, it is reported, will occupy the former Park Avenue Baptist Church at Park Avenue and Sixty-fourth Street.

Was Hessian Mercenary

The sturdy oak of the coffin when removed was worn and half decayed, but the metal name plate of the pioneer pastor was still clear and undimmed. A search through the church records then revealed the curious history of the Rev. Mr. Bork.

He came to this country at the age of nineteen to take part in the Revolutionary War. A member of the Hessian mercenaries, he was attached to the army of General Burgoyne. On the latter's defeat at Saratoga Bork was made a prisoner of war. A few months of contemplation revised his sympathies and the close of the Revolution found him a sergeant in Colonel Marinus Willett's New York State regiment.

After the war Bork studied for the ministry and became an active organizer of the North West Dutch Church. In 1808 he became its first minister and served in that capacity until he died, in 1823. He was buried beneath the pulpit of his church, which was located at Franklin Street near Church.

Moved to Twenty-third Street

Later trade incursions forced the congregation to move to a Twenty-third Street building and the coffin was moved and buried beneath the pulpit there.

In 1871 there was a third transfer to the Madison Avenue site, where the parishioners adopted the name Madison Avenue Reformed Church. In 1913 they merged with the Central Presbyterian Church and adopted the latter name.

Some time in the intermediate years the bowling alley was constructed—directly beneath the pulpit and directly over the crypt which held the patriot's coffin.

Another body, that of the Rev. Dr. James B. Hardenbergh, who was pastor of the North West Church from 1840 to 1858, was thought to have been buried beside that of Dr. Bork. After a futile search there, however, investigation revealed that his body had previously been removed to Greenwood Cemetery.

"INJURED CLIENTS" ACCUSE LAWYERS

Three on Stand in Shyster Inquiry Swear They Authorized No Suits

LOUIS PHILLIPS UNDER FIRE

Testimony of specific instances in which an attorney, Louis I. Phillips, of 299 Broadway, had brought unauthorized suits for personal injuries when there were, in fact, no injuries, was laid before Supreme Court Justice Wasservogel today by Special Prosecutor Isidor J. Kresel in in the ambulance chasing investigation.

Three witnesses, all involved in the same accident, declared on the stand they had not been injured and learned of the suits brought in their name for injuries only after the present investigation began.

One of them, Louis Kreisler, a chauffeur of 49 Avenue D, declared he had never seen or retained Phillips. Another, Leon Lauterpacht, said he had retained Phillips to recover damage for his car, and the third, Hyman Halweil, declared he had never authorized anyone to bring a suit for him.

Had Doctor's Affidavit

The summons and complaint signed by Phillips for Halweil and an affidavit of a Dr. Fisher were introduced in evidence. They gave his age as twenty-four, his address as 326 East Fourth Street, and listed his injuries in detail. Halweil said on the stand that he is forty-five, that he had never lived at the Fourth Street address, and that he ad never been examined by a Dr. Fiser.

Kreisler testified further that he never knew of the $50 settlement of his case obtained by Phillips until he appeared on May 14 before Sidney Handler, one of Mr. Kreisler's assistants, on a subpena. He said that he had then telephoned Phillips and that Nathan Forman had called upon him and offered him $25 as his share of the settlement and had asked him to testify that he had been paid his share some time before. Kreisler refused it, he said, but two days later Forman came, insisting he take the money, anyway.

Sought $1,000 Damages

The summons and complaint which was filed by Phillips in Kreisler's case said his injuries had been a sprained shoulder, contusions of the chest and hematoma of the back of the head. The damages asked were $1,000. The medical examination report was signed by a Dr. C. Sangree and said that the man was twenty-six years old and had been unable to work for three weeks, also that he was a native New Yorker. Kreisler said on the stand he was fifty-two years old, a Hungarian by birth and had not bene injured in the accident.

Further damaging testimony was brought forth by Rebecca Holinsky of 1563 Wilkins Avenue, The Bronx, and by Harry Richland of 3841 Eighteenth Avenue, Brooklyn. Mrs. Holinsky declared that she had retained Phillips to settle cases of injuries to both her son and daughter. She had received less than her share of what the settlements were shown to have been, she said.

Richland repudiated his signature on a release for $200 from an indemnity company in the case involving him.
